Tony Soper : British Isles: A Guide to the Wildlife of Coastal Waters before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised British Isles: A Guide to the Wildlife of Coastal Waters:

A companion to Tony Soper's successful wildlife guides to Antarctica and the Arctic, this new guide is illustrated throughout with specially commissioned watercolor paintings by renowned wildlife artist Dan Powell. It covers the surface wildlife that inhabits the inshore waters of northwest Europe, ranging from Brittany on the west coast of France to the North Cape, including molluscs, fish, birds, reptiles, and mammals. As a practical guide, it will be welcomed by all who have ever looked out to sea from the British coast or voyaged around its waters by yacht, fishing boat or cruise ship. As a souvenir, it will be the perfect book to bring back memories of these waters and their marine life which inhabits them; its exquisite illustrations and original engravings also recount the history of the discovery and exploration of the seas surrounding Britain.

About the Author Tony Soper was co-founder of the BBC's famous Natural History Unit and became its first film producer. He is a tour leader and lecturer and is the author of several books on birds and natural history, including Bradt's Antarctica: A Guide to the Wildlife and The Arctic: A Guide to Coastal Wildlife. Dan Powell is a full-time wildlife artist whose work has appeared in numerous bird magazines. In 1996 he received the British Birds' award for Bird Illustrator of the Year.
