Not only are the adventures of our heroine delightful, amusing and inspiring... but you will be pulled farther forward and deeper in faith through her vast insight. I found myself drawn further toward my bible, wanting to study, read and apply the principles and seek out the truth for myself as applied to my own life and adventures. I found myself drawn into Erin's adventures and delighted that she did not disappoint in her drawing correlations between what was happening to her and what the word of God reveals to her inner man during her journey. I not only saw how she connected the dots of what God was doing, I was able to share the same ability almost as if it were happening to me at the same time. This book is power packed, the Holy Ghost is clearly the author and Erin the muse. She lends her pen (or would be laptop) to God and goes on the adventure of a lifetime. She doesn't know her final destination, has no real "concrete" plan for her travel... but simply sets out in her car to see what God has in store for her. It's a cross country journey that takes her through a vast portion of the United States where she encounters many old friends and makes new ones along the way. I recommend this book to any faith seeker who is wondering what trusting God is all about and to anyone who already knows. It simply is a "must read" book for anyone in search of God's truth in a practically applied way to everyday living. Good job Erin. Your book forever changed my life and walk with God. Thank you. Laurie

I'm a traveler by worldly definition. Living out of a suitcase. No place to call home. A few days here, a few days there. We're all travelers by spiritual definition. Living out of a suitcase of temporary earthly possessions. No place for our hearts to call home. A few seasons here, a few seasons there. Without a job. Without a home. Without a clue as to what the future held. Confident in the Lord who directs our steps. This is how Erin Claxton began 2008. As both a worldly traveler and a spiritual traveler, she embarked on a three-month, cross-country road trip fully expectant that God would, indeed, direct her very steps. And not only her steps day by day, but her steps hour by hour as she offered herself to God, desiring transformation by the renewing of her mind and desiring conformity with His good, pleasing, and perfect will. In this Christ-centered chronicle of her physical journey, Erin Claxton points us to the God behind the journey, the One who orchestrates the details of our lives that we might know Him better. Both thought-provoking and humorous, her daily reflections from three months on the road challenge us to recognize the Lord in all aspects of life. This is my conscious effort. Daily worldly travels that set my mind on things above. That set my mind on the Savior I eagerly await. That set my heart on home.
