SoBy Kindle CustomerI have been a fan of Bill and Dana Lamb since I read Quest For The Lost City many years ago. For a little background on this book, I The 1930s they inherited an Orange Orchard, which required little hands-on management and got bored. So, naturally, they decided to make their own dugout canoe and sail it down the Pacific coast of Mexico. They arent doing this with cash; they have to earn their way as they go. Modest, smart, and friendly people, they meet many many interesting people, and learn -a lot. Youll notice that I keep saying they - thats because they really are equal partners in their trip, in a relaxed natural way thats wonderful to see. Dont read this book if you are bored with your job, or youre going to start musing where you can find a tree big enough to make a dugout canoe and sail off for an adventure. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Nostalgic Journey: Take a unique trip to places now no longer there By Donald A. Collins Want to take a special off beat trip with a daring couple to what then was a magic land. Don't hesitate and you will be rewarded with sights and situations which will beguile you even as you sit safely in your den's armchair. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Enchanted Vagabonds By K. C. Steffen This is the first book I've read that was written only by Dana instead of both her and her husband. It was still very interesting and well written.

Dana and Ginger Lamb had no motive but adventure when they left California in the autumn of 1933 and headed south in a 16-foot vessel they had built themselves. How else would could you explain setting off on a 16,000 mile voyage? However the romantic young explorers did possess the Vagabunda, a frail combination of sailboat and canoe. Not wanting to overload themselves the young newlyweds also brought along a minimum of equipment and, as an afterthought, less than five dollars between them. What followed was the one of the greatest adventure travel tales ever to emerge from the action-packed 1930s. The Lambs shot through mountainous surf, landed on fabled islands, lived through violent storms, weathered nearly a dozen fatal wrecks, were upset in a traffic jam of whales, caught in quicksand, trapped inside an extinct volcano, and lost in a shark-infested lagoon. Then, armed with only their wits and an old machete, they survived malaria, fought off Indians, cut their way through a jungle, and avoided flesh-eating insects, all in the name of love and adventure. "Enchanted Vagabonds" is thus the action-packed true story of their amazing combination of courage, love, and endurance. Filled with photographs taken on their historic trip, the book is a non-stop thrill from start to finish.
