It's about The Meriden Flint Glass Company. Why should she write about other companies?? I'm also from Connecticut and I realize how little information about this company there is. I've got to give Diane props for sharing what she knows about this great company. The pieces they produced were works of art. To just have a history is a wonderful tool. The pictures may be scarce but at least there are pictures. So much is still unknown and an in-depth study is so needed. I surely hope Diane doesn't give up on her studies of the subject. I believe many of the pieces are mis-identified today as Mt. Washington, Boston Sandwich, and the like. I also like to mention that I do not know the author at all but am a glass researcher myself. I'm the founder of Glass Lovers Glass Database here on the net. If you love to learn about our early glass, spread your wings and learn about The Meriden Flint Glass Company. I purchased this book hoping to identify different patterns of flint glass, wrong, what it is a history diary of the Flint Glass Co. showing very little styles of flint glass. If you are looking for a book showing different patterns of flint glass do not purchase this book, it shows less than 2 dozen pictures of glass.

Founded in 1876, the Meriden Flint Glass Company produced internationally renowned glass that adorned ornate lanterns, jewelry boxes, vases and many other intricate pieces. Although it was only in operation for a brief time, the company remains an important landmark in Meriden, Connecticut, as well as in the history of the American glassmaking industry. Author Diane Tobin details the history of the company, drawing on extensive sources ranging from local Meriden papers to the personal diary of the company's intrepid leader, Joseph Bourne. Fascinating insights into how the famous glass was made, the role the company played in early labor movements and the growth of Meriden alongside it round out this exciting history of the Meriden Flint Glass Company.

About the Author Diane Tobin attended the University of Hartford and graduated cum laude from Central Connecticut State University in 1989 with a BS in art education, grades pre-K through 12. She taught middle school art and Latin from 2003 to 2011. She is currently pursuing certification to teach elementary and middle school Latin. Over the past five years, she has been invited to speak about the Meriden Flint Glass Company in Connecticut, Massachusetts and New York. She enjoys giving these talks immensely and loves the opportunity to meet so many interesting and interested people.
